

In this episode, Dominique and co-host Luke Shealy piggyback off their last mic drop about how fashion and art can be a force for activism. They extend the conversation by examining the ways in which self-expression can lead to unintended implications in the form of cultural appropriation.

1. What is cultural appropriation?
2. What is the difference between cultural appreciation and cultural appropriation? What can you do to avoid crossing the line from appreciation to appropriation?
3. What are some examples of cultural appropriation mentioned in the podcast? That you've seen in your life? Society? Social media?
4. In what ways do you feel that mainstream media has intensified the appropriation of marginalized cultures?
5. If someone close to you is appropriating a marginalized culture, what steps would you take to address the matter? Have you ever done so? How did it turn out?
