

Should School Resource Officers be in Schools?

Should School Resource Officers be in schools? Hosts Nyawira, Luke, and Sam speak to students of the Youth Justice Project who are looking to answer this question. They have been working with their school system and local community to examine the role these officers play. They discuss the process of planning a town hall and how to navigate complex systems like schools.

Questions for Extended Dialogue:

- How did the students featured in the podcast engage with their community?
- Do you think the direction of a town hall was the best way to have a conversation of School Resource Officers? Why or why not?
- How did the students continue their activism after their town hall?
- What are other ways to follow up on an issue after an event like a town hall?
- Do you feel like a community survey is an effective way to collect information on an issue? Why or why not?
